

It Takes A Community To Build A Park

Like the first Wildcat Park built in 1987, the new Wildcat Park is a volunteer-driven project. The design for the playground has been created from the minds of Corvallis children to inspire creativity and imagination in those who come to play.

The plan is under way and once again the whole community is invited to participate through raising money and building the public park.

The Wildcat Park steering committee will organize volunteers according to skill level. Some will wield hammers and saws, others will serve food, and still others will care for the children so parents can work. The park will be built in five days and the entire community is invited to celebrate its completion Sunday, June 3.
